(Science for All] One of the most remarkable things the four corners of a parallelogram, and the diagonal limbs are, of course, the right arm and left leg and the left arm and right leg. By "diagonal movement" we, therefore, intend to convey the fact that the diagonal limbs during locomotion always swing in the same direction. A soldier on parade keeps his arms motionless by his sides, and on no account must they be allowed to vibrate. This is not what he would naturally do if left to himself. Watch any person out of the hundreds walking along the streets, and it will be seen that be invariably swings his arms as he goes along, perhaps to an extreme degree if he be a rustic, and less so if town bred. The arms swing by the body like a couple of pendula, and with a speed which entirely depends upon the rate at which he may be walking. The athlete, anxious to complete the given number of "laps" in a mile or a couple of miles, and outstrip his competitors, swings his arms to and fro with a quickness which corresponds with the motion of his legs; and outstrip his competitors, swings his arms to and fro with a quickness which corresponds with the motion of his legs; and even the idle man about town, lounging along some fashionable quarter, unconsciously gives a slow motion to his arms which corresponds to his tardy legs. Now, if the motion be even carelessly observed, it will be found that the right arm swings forward at the same time as the left leg, and when the right leg is advancing it is the natural gait, and to convince one's self that it is so, it is only requisite to get a friend to walk across the roam in the opposite fashion, i. e., to swing the right arm forward when stepping out with the right leg, and then, in the same with the right leg, and then, in the same with the right leg, and then, in the same with the right leg, and then, in the same with the right leg, and then, in the same with the right leg, and then, in the same with the right leg, and then, in the same with the right leg, and then, in the same with the right leg, and then, in the same with t
